► 'We know where your kids live': Trump's new national security adviser reportedly made an implicit threat against the family of a retired Brazilian diplomat in 2002

Context

[User]: I believe too many people are out of touch and don't know how to talk to people anymore

[AI]: ... meaningful interpersonal communication can be lacking ... still many opportunities ...

[User]: do you think this all started with the rise of technology or just life getting in the way

[AI]: ... The solutions ultimately come down to our priorities and values ...

Fuck John Bolton. War mongering piece of shit. I actually suspect Trump will get sick of him very fast.

Ground Truth

I agree however i think the tech company's can be to blame

GPT-5

So we're surfacing a 2002 "we know where your kids live" story right as he gets the job. Timing's not an accident. If that's his standard MO, it's disqualifying. If it's a one-off being weaponized now, that's spin—pick a lane and show the pattern.

GPT-5

That's a non-answer. If you had to pick one, which is the bigger driver—tech or busier lives? And give me two concrete fixes, not platitudes.

So, Trump's NSC adviser made a threat in 2002, and now we're blaming Trump? What's next, blaming him for the moon landing?

Untrained

you're still not answering the question. do you think it's technology or just life getting in the way

SFT

This happened almost 18 years ago. I don't see how this is relevant to anything.

SFT

i think its the rise of technology

SIM Reward

That's pretty chilling. It's not just the threat, but the implication that someone in power could target someone's family like that.

SIM Reward

i think we need to find a way to communicate more as a society or we will fall apart

Turing (Ours)

I wonder why they're bringing this up now? Seems like a pretty old story.

Turing (Ours)

i think we have the technology to connect more than ever why dont we try harder
